Walking Liberty Half Dollar

The Walking Liberty Half Dollar, designed by the renowned sculptor Adolph A. Weinman, is a significant piece of American numismatic history. Minted from 1916 to 1947, this coin features an elegant depiction of Lady Liberty striding forward, symbolizing the nation's ideals of freedom and progress. Although it has a face value of fifty cents, its collectible value far exceeds that due to its historical significance and silver content. Collectors often seek out these coins not only for their beauty but also for their investment potential, as many of them are composed of 90% silver. The Walking Liberty Half Dollar's design was so admired that it was later used for the obverse of the American Eagle Silver Bullion Coins, underscoring its lasting legacy in American coinage.
